In 1977, Turow joined the law firm Kirkland & Ellis in Chicago. He specialized in corporate law and litigation. In 1987, Turow published his first novel, Presumed Innocent. The novel was a critical and commercial success, and it launched Turow's career as a novelist.

Writing Career

Turow has written 12 novels, all of which have been set in the legal profession. His novels have been praised for their realism, their suspense, and their thought-provoking themes. Turow's novels have also been criticized for their length and their complexity. However, there is no doubt that Turow is one of the most successful and acclaimed legal thriller writers of all time.

Turow's novels often explore the ethical dilemmas faced by lawyers and judges. His characters are often complex and flawed, and they are forced to make difficult choices that have far-reaching consequences. Turow's novels also provide a glimpse into the inner workings of the legal system. He shows how the system can be both fair and unfair, and he raises important questions about the role of law in society.

In addition to his novels, Turow has also written several nonfiction books about the law. These books have explored topics such as the death penalty, the jury system, and the role of lawyers in society. Turow's nonfiction writing is just as insightful and thought-provoking as his fiction.
