

Ten Arrows of Iron: The Grave of Empires in the Stone Age

The history of warfare is a long and bloody one, filled with tales of conquest, defeat, and the rise and fall of civilizations. But even in the earliest days of human history, before the advent of metal weapons and organized armies, there were conflicts that shaped the course of history. One such conflict was the Battle of Ten Arrows of Iron, which took place in the Stone Age between two powerful tribes, the Hattians and the Hurrians.

The Hattians

The Hattians were a powerful people who lived in the region of Anatolia (modern-day Turkey) from around 2500 BC. They were a skilled and organized people, and they had a long history of warfare. The Hattians were also known for their advanced culture, and they were one of the first peoples to develop a written language.
